As the World Bank also claims, the life and the future of a child is marked by brain development in the early years. Learning and stimulation during the early years is a key building block to help young children reach their full potential. Early Childhood Education (ECE) can improve cognitive skills, reduce repetition and drop-out rates, increase school retention, and help develop socioemotional and life skills, and the ability to learn that children need to succeed as adults in a world that might be very different from the one we live in today.

Referring at Eurydice Report 2019, Key Data on Early Childhood Education and Care in Europe, and on the Council Recommendation of 22 May 2019 on high-Quality Early Childhood Education and Care Systems, it is necessary to start political strategies to guarantee the accessibility to all children of quality services that refer to clear standards, projected for all children. In addition, to promote and share good practices among different professionals, to encourage the scientific community and higher education institutions to monitor and guarantee the continuous training of professionals in the field of ECE.

Research also indicates that offering high-quality ECEC services can help reduce future public spending on welfare, health and even justice. Since high-quality ECEC lays solid foundations for the success of lifelong learning, it benefits children, especially those from disadvantaged backgrounds. ECEC represent the foundation for structuring a more effective and equitable education system.

Recognizing the importance of the issue, we invite you to participate in the first ECEC conference in Albania to discuss together and share reflections, research, good practices in Early Childhood Education and Care.
